

Indias National Writing

By Saraswati Saran

Munshiram Manoharlal Publishers Pvt Ltd, New Delhi, 1969. Hardcover. Condition: New. First. 180pp. Here is a book which not only emphasizes the need for a common script for all the languages of India as a solid step towards the cultural and emotional integration of Indias different parts-which has been often done, although in a rather sketchy way-but also brings to the fore the full implication of the problem and provides answer to every conceivable question which arises in this connection. Dealing in detail with the development of main scripts of the world and the phonetic laws and evolution, it is also a valuable source of information to every student of scriptology and phonology-particularly in the context of the Indian languages.
