Excerpt from The Story of Sir Humphrey Davy and the Invention of the Safety-Lamp It seems, therefore, that in a chemical sense coal differs from wood in containing nearly twice as much carbon, somewhat less hydrogen, which is one Of the chief elements of water, and considerably less oxygen, which is one Of the chief elements of air; in other words, as the wood gradually decays, the hydrogen and oxygen, or gaseous parts, disappear more quickly than the carbon, or solid parts, and hence a great excess Of carbon remains in the fossil wood. Roughly speaking, we may say that you can convert wood into coal by soaking it in water, and exposing it to Immense heat and pressure for a considerable period.
