Excerpt: . . . in the manufacture of dyestuffs in the last two or three years has developed the methods for the testing of the substances used in coloring the textiles. There are now many laboratories which are devoted to solving the problems of the dyer and checking up his work. The examination of the effects of this coloring matter upon the fabric is becoming more and more of an exact science. The fabrics are scrutinized under ultra-violet rays and under daylight lamps. Also, they are subjected to the microscope so that, if crystals of the chemicals are detected clinging to the threads, a fault in the dyeing process may be corrected. The colored fabrics are dipped in dilute acids or in alkali solutions so that their fastness may be determined. The strength of dyes is accurately measured in an apparatus known as a colorimeter, in which solutions of the dye placed between the observer and the light are studied through an eyepiece. Before a manufacturer colors thousands of yards of a valuable fabric, he must know precisely whether the dye to be used will match that which had been employed on other goods. No matter how much confidence he may have in the skill of the master dyer, he insists also upon having the shade checked up by the scientists. American dye manufacture, said Dr. Edward Wallace Pierce, chief chemist of the United States Conditioning and Testing Company, has made great progress. It is handicapped somewhat by...
