Excerpt from The Church of Thibet: And the Historical Analogies of Buddhism and Christianity, a Lecture Delivered Before the Students Literary and Scientific Society, in the Framji Cowasji Intitution, Bombay, The materials for this lecture were derived, as stated in the text, from sources which are accessible to everybody. My chief obligations are due to Burnouf. Lassen, and Keoppen, more particularly the last, without whose aid my lecture could certainly never have been written. I can well believe that I have fallen into some errors in my exposition of Buddhist theology, as matters of this kind are open to much dispute, and probably there have been recent additions to our knowledge of this subject with which I am unacquainted. For the purpose, however, which I had in view, minute accuracy was unessential. In the comparative study of religious phenomena the most obvious and general facts are the most important. I cannot guess whether any of my Brahmanic friends and hearers were displeased with the freedom of my references to the Brahmanic gods, and the system of caste. Probably they have become so familiar with depreciatory criticism, from missionary and liberal quarters alike, of their institutions and creed, that now they rather like it, or at least never think of resenting it Some of my Christian hearers were, I fear, not quite so tolerant of the frequent references to the dose analogies between Buddhist and Christian supernaturalism. Many persons who hold on the dogmas of their inherited brief is of the lightest kind, still object strongly to hear them questioned in India, or dassed with native beliefs. Their pride of race is wounded by whatever seems to put them on a level with...
