Next we see him bursting like a shell this narrow confine, and soaring away to stately Edinburgh, throned on crags, to become there a principality and power among many, and to give stimulus and inspiration to hosts of young aspirants. What divine of the age, on the whole, can we name with Chalmers? Horsley was, perhaps, an abler man, but where the moral grandeur? Hall had the moral grandeur, and a far more cultivated mind; Foster had a sterner, loftier, and richer genius; but where, in either, the seraphic ardour, activity, and energy of Christian character possessed by Chalmers? Irving, as an orator, had more artistic skill, and, at the same time, his blood was warm with a more volcanic and poetic fire; but he was only a brilliant fragment, not a whole--he was a meteor to a star--a comet to a sun--a Vesuvius, peaked, blue, crowned with fire, to a domed Mont Blanc. Chalmers stood alone; and centuries may elapse ere the Church shall see--and when did she ever more need to see?--another such spirit as he? Dr Chalmers died on the night of the 30th May, 1847. He had recently returned from London, and apparently in his usual good health. During the whole of the evening, as if he had kept his brightest smiles and...
