Excerpt: . . . Announcements of the Departments The following list presents a brief description of the advanced courses offered in the Graduate School suitable to form constituent parts of major and minor studies. Discrimination has not been attempted in all cases between purely graduate courses and those which are also open to advanced undergraduates in the College of Arts, Philosophy, and Science. Many of the courses mentioned are of the latter class, but are suited to the needs of many holders of a Bachelors degree. It should be remembered also that in many cases the work of graduate students consists of individual reading, experiment, investigation, and research in some special line or subject not covered by any announced course and not involving or calling for attendance upon regular lecture or class. Such graduate work is obviously incapable of announcement and description as a course. For further information...
