It must have been an absolute secret, so much depended on it. How could any one have found out, Ashton They could not unless some one in the War Office told, said Sir Ashton, and all at once his eyes rushed to Roberta. She met them steadily, but Mildred Downer, in a flash of intuition, guessed the truth. Lady Trask had known the ship Kendrick sailed on, because Sir Ashton had told her! Mildreds glance slid across the room to Captain OToole, who was apparently enjoying his supper. Lets go home--this is awful! said Lady Cecily. They rose and made their way toward the door. On the way they passed the table where Larry OToole sat, and he rose to intercept them, and say good evening. He was in high spirits. He walked with them toward the foyer, until he had a chance to catch Lady Bobs attention. He lifted his eyebrows and she nodded. Congratulations, he said to her with a smile. PART THREE PART THREE CHAPTER I Mildred Downer spent a perfectly sleepless night after the supper at the Savoy, where the news of the sinking of the Hartshire was announced, and the ugly certainty had come to her that Roberta Trask knew in advance the name of the ship on which Lord Kendrick went down. At first she tried to dismiss the whole thing from her mind. It was not unnatural that Sir Ashton...
