As if to reassure her on this very point, he spoke aloud. Lena, I had clean forgot you were so pretty. What did you say, Tom she asked, thrusting her head above the robe to hear again the praise she feigned to miss. I had forgotten, he repeated, that you were so confoundedly pretty. I should think you would have forgotten it, she retorted. You gave yourself time enough to forget almost anything. This unexpected show of spirit invested her with new piquancy, and he laughed aloud. At that moment the sleigh emerged upon the brow of the hill and caught the full force of the wind. A violent gust filled her hood and threw it back upon her shoulders, disclosing, as by the touch of a magicians wand, the mass of soft curls blowing wildly about her little head, her flushed cheeks and shining eyes. She saw the wide, desolate sweep of the valley, dotted here and there with twinkling lights, the belt of crimson against the distant hills; and then she saw his...
