Excerpt from Address Delivered Before the Queens County Agricultural Society, at Its Third Anniversary, at Jamaica, Thursday, October 10th, 1844 Numerous wild and arid plains, which have not now for ages produced a head of grain, and some of them scarcely a blade of grass, were then tilled like gardens the numerous terraced hills, and even mountains; the frequent remains of canals and aqueducts for the purposes of irrigation, all show the high advance which that ancient people had made in the art of cultivating the earth. The result of all this was an immense population, living in ease and comfort, of which the earliest Spanish accounts, compared with what they are now, or have been at any time during the last two centuries, almost appear like fables, and would truly be considered as such, but for the corroboration which they receive from the numerous architectural and other remains scattered over the whole country, to an extent which is truly surprising.
