CHAPTER I, Object of this chapter-- Story of Kars --My duty--General Sir Fenwick Williams--Condition of Turkish troops--Fortifications--The army--The Rediff--Vassif Pasha--The Ramazan and feast of Ba iram--General Williams despatch--Desertion--Total defeat of the Russians--Movements of the day--Bravery of the attack --Conduct of Turks--The capitulation--Kmetz and Kolmau--The Convention--The Russian camp--Captain Thompson. The object of the following chapter is rather to introduce a few letters of my own, and more of my lamented friend Captain Thompson, written at Kars, to friends and relatives in England, than to give any lengthened or connected narrative of the events of the blockade of that place by the Russians. I would rather hasten on to record some of the incidents of our travel and captivity, and, without binding myself to any unqualified admiration of the government and institutions of Russia, never theless express my grateful remembrance of much generous treatment, and of many a sincere personal kindness. For reasons, which I have before assigned, I shall only glance at a few points of interest connected with our strong but ineffectual struggle to hold the important fortress, which has so long justly been considered the key to Asia Minor, in any contest between the Muscovite and the Turk. For beyond the interest which all military men must feel in a more technical and professional account of our style and method of defence, the public has little to learn which they do not already know of...
