ON THE MNEMIC ORIGIN AND NATURE OF THE AFFECTIVE TENDENCIES I If we study the behaviour of the different organisms from the unicellular to man, we see that a whole series of their acts, and especially the most important, may be interpreted as the manifestation of a tendency of the organism to persist in or to return to its stationary physiological state--to use an epithet from Ostwald's energetics. In other words, if we reserve the name of affective for that special category of organic tendencies which are subjectively manifested in man in the form of desires, appetites, or needs, and which objectively in man and the animals are translated into nonmechanized movements, completed or nascent, then a whole series of the principal affective tendencies thus defined may be reduced to the single fundamental tendency of the organism to maintain its physiological invariability....
