Excerpt from A Manual of Palaeontology, Vol. 1 of 2: For the Use of Students, With a General Introduction on the Principles of Palaeontology The term fossilisation may be applied in a general sense to all the processes through which an organic body passes in order to be come a fossil. Here we need only consider the three leading forms in which fossils present themselves. In the first instance, the fossil is to all intents and purposes an actual organic remain, being itself a fragment of an animal or plant. Thus we may meet with fossil bones, shells, or wood, which may have undergone certain changes, such as would be produced by pressure, by the deprivation of organic matter originally present, or by more or less complete infiltration with mineral matter, but which, nevertheless, are practically the real bodies they represent. As a matter of course, it is in the more modern formations that we find fossils least changed from their primitive condition, but almost all formations contain some fossils in which the original structure is more or less completely retained.
