You awaken from a deep sleep to find yourself in a dimly lit room. A large gathering of friends hover uneasily around you. A young man slouches against the wall picking at a hangnail. An older woman s eyes glisten as she peers longingly at your face. She is your favorite aunt and, as you look up, you take note of an embarrassing drip leaving her nose. Single file they shuffle up to you. Standing in a corner of the small room, your father embraces your mother, comforting her as she sobs quietly, but inconsolably. Her crying draws tears from the others around you. Wondering what your family and friends are doing, you mean to stand and ask them. Ineffectually you attempt to sit up. Your best friend from high school walks over slowly and you ask him for a bit of help. Instead, he kneels in front of you and water streams from his eyes, down his freshly shaven cheeks. As he grasps your hand he mumbles, I just wish we could grab one more rum and coke, buddy. His voice quivers uneasily. What in the hell is going on here? you shout - but no one hears you. Surveying the room it becomes painfully obvious. Flower arrangements line the walls. Baby blue satin pillows embrace your limp limbs. You try to scream but your mouth is sewn shut. In fact, you come to realize that even your eyelids are glued together but somehow you can still see. As a younger cousin stares at your face you wonder if she can sense your eyes behind their curtains. The hospital room slowly comes back to me as I open my eyes...
