A serial killer known as The Reader is murdering journalists in the manner of their most famous stories. Dubbed the Media Murders by the press, the killings baffle authorities, turn once-aggressive reporters into prey and shock the country in what soon becomes a national story. The cunning killer s first strike is cleverly disguised as a political assassination, mirroring John Hinckley s attempt on Ronald Reagan. As it turns out, the fallen reporter had covered Reagan s shooting. It s the first of several bizarre killings with eerie similarities to sensational stories the murdered journalists once covered. The story is so big, The New York Times assigns its new national reporter, Cassandra Cassie Jordan, to cover its every development. The assignment returns Cassie to her familiar stomping grounds of Harrisburg, Pa., reuniting her with Frank Telly Tellis, chief political reporter for The Harrisburg Herald. Only Telly can put together the murderous truth as the secret motive for the killings is buried deep in his journalistic past. But can he solve the puzzle before falling under The Reader...
