Excerpt from Old Castles: Including Sketches of Carlisle, Corby, and Linstock Castles But heightening what at first they seemed to harm, Beauty with beauty still delighting well. But thou hast more, O Carlisle, than thy streams Thy castled heights crown many a charming rood, Renowned in olden story 5 field and fell, Through many a league of gracious solitude, Where yet perchance some genuine bard still dreams, Bearing sure witness to the ancient feud Of Scot and Briton, and the Roman strength That interposed between them, and subdued The vagrant Pict to British force at length. And age by age the gathering centuries round, Thy history s written still upon the ground, Which compasses thee around, or far or near, The travelled wanderer catching something here To-day, if skilful, of the ancient sound.
