Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Malaria Mosquitoes: Abstract of a Discourse Delivered Before the Royal Institution of Great Britain on March 2nd 1900 These observations were confirmed and extended by a large number of persons working in various parts of the world - most prominent among whom are Marchiafava, Celli, Vandyke Carter, Grassi, Osier, Bignami, Antolisei, Councilman, Mannaberg, Rcmanowsky, Labbe, Koch, Manson, Thayer and MacCallum. In short, the work of all these observers, and of many others scarcely less meritorious, has not only absolutely established the fact that the parasites are the cause of malarial fever, but has given us a very thorough knowledge both of the parasites themselves and of their pathological effects, direct and indirect; until the science of malaria - for it may almost be described as a science in itself - has become a brilliant exemplar of the modern methods of research as regards the science of disease in general. But I am not here concerned with questions of pathology in malarial fever. At the conclusion of the labours to which I have just referred, we had, it is true, grasped the nature of the disease itself; but a question of the greatest moment still required an answer. We had studied side by side the morbid process and the parasites which cause it; but we had still to find out how infection is caused, how these parasites effect an entry. We had ascertained the life-history of the parasites within man, and of the kindred parasites within other animals; but, even after all these investigations, the life-history of the parasites outside man and outside other vertebrate hosts remained to be discovered. Until this was done our knowledge...
