Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from The Latter-Day Saints Millennial Star, Vol. 73: June 15, 1911 N O man has spent his life in vain whose aim and ambition has been the betterment of himself. No fountain is so small but that heaven may be imaged in its bosom. Some years ago we met an old gentlemen who had been active in newspaper work in Salt Lake City during the early sixties, and who was well acquainted with President Brigham Young. After our introduction had been graciously acknowledged by the old gentleman, we began asking about the great man, who, under the guiding hand of Omnipotence, was so instrumental in directing the destinies of what was to become a mighty people, whose religion was to be heralded to all the nations of the world. He told us of his knowledge of the Mormons during those early days, of his intercourse with Brigham Young and of his impressions of the residents of the territory of Utah. He was unstinted in his praise of the hardy pioneers and their fearlessness in overcoming the natural conditions which seemed to be...
