Phil Woodworth. Paperback. Book Condition: New. Paperback. 246 pages. Dimensions: 9.8in. x 6.9in. x 1.0in. Keeping on point and avoiding being pushed into related but non-EA activities; buying time to do things properly while still being responsive and agile to changes in enterprise drivers; finding and fitting into the organisations governance structure rather than being shoehorned in or muscled out; building a capability not just delivering a series of non-repeatable, point-sensitive EA services are just some of the many challenges facing Enterprise Architects today. While there are a number of useful, informative and implementable EA frameworks and books available to guide organisations on what EA should deliver, organisations and individuals lack a target architecture for their EA function that will help them align to their enterprise and plan and oversee its change. This leaves many decisions to be made in the absence of sound, communicable, measurable and transparent views as to why and what to strive for. This book endeavors to further lift the discipline of EA by filling this gap and providing a reference architecture for an EA function and taking an EA approach to its documentation and analysis to help demonstrate, explain and rationalize EA and the EA function. Providing an outline of the key drivers and components of an EA function, including the influences on, and objectives of, EA, and the business and technology processes and resources used to perform EA to address these. As a reference architecture typically describes a complete target architecture, and a complete architecture can take a long time to develop and fine tune, more than can be expected within a single release, project or time frame that initial outcomes are required by EA stakeholders and customers, the book takes a look at the different capabilities or themes that might be focused on to...
