Not illustrated. 1863 Excerpt: . . . arrival, precipitated as it had been by such exciting circumstances, while changing nothing in Onofrios inclinations to befriend him, yet confirmed him in his plan of prudent delay. Not until time had tested the temper of Vincenzos resolution, would Onofrio play his trump card in his behalf. But in the meanwhile--that is, during this period of probation--Vincenzo could not remain idle to chew the cud of his misery; he must have plenty to do, and earn money for his labour. Here was the difficulty. Required occupation at twenty-four hours notice is not to be had for the wishing. After ransacking all the cells in his brain for half the night without finding the clue to what he sought, Onofrio with a sudden jerk sat up in his bed, gave his head a great thump and exclaimed, VVhat an ass I am! And my statistics What should hinder me from making over that task to him, and paying him as from the Government Whereupon Onofrio laid himself down again and slept soundly. Next morning Vincenzo, after a frugal breakfast, a cup of chocolate and a slice of bread, putting his bundle of papers under his arm, went to take possession, as agreed upon overnight, of his old room at Onofrios. It was a cheerful little room, commanding, as we already know, a fine view of the hills on the other side of the Po. As Vincenzo stood at the window and gazed at the familiar features of...
