Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Science as a Means of Agricultural Progress: The Agricultural Experiment Stations of Europe The cities, which have their roots in the country, would be paralyzed in every industry, in all their traffic, in all their commerce. The North would be depopulated by starvation or by emigration to snowless and frostless latitudes, and only a few hunters in winter, or herdsmen in summer, would break the solitudes of a New England desolation. Our wealth, our enterprise, our intelligence, and our very virtue depend in large degree upon our agriculture; and our agriculture is the result of experience, and therefore depends mainly upon experiment. Agricultural experiment then, it cannot be denied, is an exceedingly weighty matter. But as agriculture has grown in the past from small beginnings and by slow degrees until it has subdued the forests and dried up the morasses of nearly all Europe and much of North America, and has raised our savage and plundering German and Anglo-Saxon ancestry to such habit of doing and having, that their posterity, by sheer inheritance of character and possessions, now comprise the foremost nations of the world, - so agriculture must go on to grow, winning more acreage from forest and swamp, building more railroads and steamships, more cities and manufactories, and employing an ever-increasing force of men and women, horses, waterwheels, and engines to do its traffic, turn its useful raw products into more useful fabrics and foods, or to supply its incessant demand for more tools, machines, and fertilizers. Our soil is a mine of infinitely more riches than all the gold veins or placers of California and Colorado. Out of it the farmer digs...
