Thorough manual! Its this kind of excellent study. It really is written in straightforward terms and never difficult to understand. I am very happy to inform you that this is basically the very best pdf we have read through during my individual existence and could be the greatest ebook for possibly.

Excerpt: . . . of fragments, one a crystalline marble, others finer-grained limestones, and one harder, probably a quartzite--all imbedded in a matrix partly calcareous. In this, mica probably fragmental is present, and a thin section shows a few minute rutiles. The rock has undergone crushing; this, however, has affected another specimen from the same place more strongly, 184, for it has produced a lamination. The powder of the last-named rock is unusually rich in small rutiles, one in a felspar crystal, and contains several prisms of a pale greenish, indigo-coloured mineral, more probably tourmaline than hornblende. Some schistose calcareous grits come next. 258, from moraine coming from west foot of Golden Throne. Microscopic examination shows grains generally of quartz, occasionally composite, mostly irregular in outline, sometimes lenticular or slightly elongated, occurring at intervals along the laminae of a very fine-grained ground-mass. This exhibits slightly undulate thin laminae, partly of thin flakes of clear mica, partly of a more dusty material. They are separated by a granular aggregate, doubtless crushed, in which occasionally clearer calcite crystals occur close to a larger fragment, formed either by its debris or under its lee. Cubes of pyrite, and products which result from its oxidation, are present. The rock is a schistose calcareous grit. 268, from the same moraine, a purplish-grey schistose rock, seemingly an impure limestone modified by pressure, bears considerable resemblance to the last both in the hand specimen and under the microscope, but is not quite so distinctly crushed,...
