Containing some Remarks on what Mr. PiJonniere calls a Renunciation j as also on some other Passages, both in his late Book, and his former Writings. TH 0 it might justly admit of a Dispute, whether a Jesuit in Disguize (I am arguing only on the Possibility of Mr. PiJonniere being so, in Opposition to the pretended Demonstration of the contrary) driven to the Necessity of making some publick Declaration, might, agreeably to their Manner, bring himself off with his own Church, by saying, Tis true, I did renounce all thole Errors which stand condemnd, OV. But I did not renounce all those Doctrines which stand condemned as Errors: But none of the Doctrines of our Church being erroneous, I have not disclaimed any one of them yet. Tho it might reasonably have been expected from one bred and ordaind a...
