Excerpt: . . . was a little surprised by Winton's broken ecstasies, by her mother's tremulous kiss of approval. Is there anything left for me to decide she said. Nobody knew very well what was said or done in the agitated half-hour that remained. It was agreed between them that the details, of which Lady Anne had spoken with a blush, should be arranged afterwards, when all were more cool and masters of themselves--a state to which no one of the little group attained until Winton was hurrying along the country roads towards the station, and Lady Anne and her mother were seated in forlorn quiet alone in that little room which for the last week had been the scene of so many excitements. The Duchess rose with a start when the little French clock on the mantelpiece chimed one. My dearest, she said, we have many things to do which look like falsehood, we women. You and I must appear at luncheon as if nothing had happened. There must be no red eyes, my love, no abstraction. It will be all over the world in no time, if we do not take care. For myself, alas! I am used to it; but you, Anne---- Lady Anne did not immediately reply. She said, There is one thing, mamma, to which I have made up my mind---- The Duchess was examining herself in the glass to see if she was pale or red, or anything different from her ordinary...
