Createspace, United States, 2012. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . You want to be a leader but where do you start? It doesn't start with a certain position. It doesn't start with finding followers. It definitely doesn't start with a group of people electing you to be their leader. The real secret to developing strong, lasting leadership starts with YOU learning how to lead YOU. Because the people whom you'll eventually lead are wondering: If I can't trust you to lead YOU, how can I trust you to lead ME? There is one distinguishing characteristic that separates effective and ineffective leaders more than any other - the intentional effort to lead oneself well before trying to lead others well. The thing is, leading yourself first is as important for the leader of Fortune 500 Company as it is for the student who leads his or her club at school. Most leaders fail, not because of the way they lead others, but because of the way they lead themselves. In Leadership Starts With You, Tim Milburn explains how to: - Keep the promises you make to yourself as a way to keep the promises you make to others. - Develop a disciplined framework to your life. - Apply The Rhodium Rule - the one rule that tells you why self-leadership is so important. - Create a growth P.L.A.N. that actually works. - Get the most value out of each day. - Take responsibility for your life rather than accept it. - Assess your own character to identify your own blind spots. - Capitalize on improving your physical health to improve all other areas of your life. - Take an authentic look at your life and approach your shortcomings...
