Funny, serious, juicy, sometimes dramatic, always rewarding and these forty essays written by women 50 years and older probe the issues and experiences of their generations. Readers will laugh in recognition and cry with empathy. The essays are grouped into six categories: Juggling: Nine to Five, If Only it Were Different, What We All Should Know, Looks, Hellos and Goodbyes, and Love and Lust. Within their pages are insights into the daily realities as well as the life altering issues that define our lives. The format and size are perfect for time-crunched, busy women who can dip into the book when they have a few minutes and then come back to it later. Its ideal for book groups and will provide fodder for conversations with friends and sisters. This book covers the impact of that wrenching struggle between the competing demands of motherhood and career. It examines the pluses and minuses of losing friends. There are essays about abuse, divorce, building a business, overcoming health problems, and finding Mr. Right. It even deals with the invisibility that causes salespeople...
