R.C. Muirhead-Thomson

Cambridge University Press. Paperback. Condition: New. 284 pages. Dimensions: 9.lin. x 5.9in. x 0.8in. The problem of pesticide contamination of running waters is one of concern in many different fields of human activity. A critical experimental approach is essential in trying to understand how individual stream fauna react and how integrated aquatic communities respond to these toxic chemicals, both over short periods and in the long term. This book, first published in 1987, deals with three aspects of pesticide contamination. First...
