Excerpt from The Timbers of British Guiana: A Report Upon the Collection Made by the Hon. A. G. Bell The identification of wood by means of the structure is not easy, hence the minuteness of detail into which we have entered. To some this may appear redundant, but when small specimens have to be examined, the most trying detail is often of great service. On the other hand, the comparison of the structure of two specimens is very easy and convincing. All that is necessary is to trim the end (transverse section) of a plank of each, with a sharp knife or plane, to a cleanly-cut surface, and to hold them side by side in the hand, so that a portion of each may be brought under the lens at the same time. Examination of first one specimen and then another is misleading, and should never be relied upon. Even when thin sections are examined under a microscope they should be arranged so that both are upon one slide and appear in the field of vision at the same time. Every item in the following descriptions of the woods in this collection, appears in the same order, and may be found readily without reading the whole. The individual features of one wood may be checked against another, word by word. The phrases employed are the same for similar things, and each term bears the same value throughout. In addition, no feature has been overlooked in any case; if the information be lacking, the fact is indicated by the sign l.
