Excerpt: . . . was properly to be regarded as a class of itself, and because there was no general law covering the conditions there involved. The special law now under inquiry is directed and confined to a case for which ample provision is made by an existing general law, and hence it is an enactment which the Constitution plainly and positively prohibits. Statutes: date for becoming effective. Repeals by implication. Tax exemptions at discretion of Legislature; mortgages held by domestic fire insurance companies; Chapter 197 of the Acts of 1914. Under section 31 of Article 3 of the Constitution, unless otherwise provided in the terms of a statute, an Act of the Legislature becomes effective on the 1st of June following its passage. pp. 383-334 Repeal of statutes by mere implication are never favored by the courts. p-335 It is only when there is a plain, unavoidable repugnancy between the statutes that a later Act is held to repeal a former one by implication. P-385 If a subsequent Act can be made, by any reasonable construction, to stand with previous legislation, that construction will always be adopted. P-385 This is especially true of Acts passed at one and the same session of the Legislature; in such cases there is a strong presumption against an implied repeal, and they are to be construed together, if possible, so as to give effect to each. P-385 References to the Code, in amending the laws, may be either to the Code of...
